Who Are You With Money?

Before you can change your financial behaviour, you need to understand it. Your Digital Money Identity describes your current patterns, instincts, and blind spots with digital money. Read all five types below, then identify the one that fits you most honestly.

Type 1 The Impulse Spender

You live in the moment. Flash sales, last-minute Jumia deals, and TikTok gadgets call your name. Digital platforms are engineered to trigger impulse decisions — countdowns, one-click buying, personalised ads. You are not weak; you are being targeted by billion-dollar marketing systems.

SIGNS YOU MIGHT BE THIS TYPE:

- You act first and regret later — 'Buy Now, Think Later' energy
- You are often short of cash before month's end
- You have subscriptions you forgot you signed up for
- Shopping notifications excite rather than alarm you

YOUR UPGRADE STRATEGY:

- + Introduce a 24-hour rule: wait before any non-essential purchase over KSh 500
- + Set a fixed monthly 'fun' budget — once it's gone, it's gone
- + Move shopping apps off your home screen into a buried folder
- + Unsubscribe from promotional SMS and email notifications

Type 2 The Silent Saver

You are disciplined and strategic — possibly the most financially healthy type. You stash money quietly in savings accounts, rarely overspend, and have an emergency fund. Your biggest risk is that your money may be sitting idle rather than growing. Savings accounts beat inflation poorly — it's time to invest.

SIGNS YOU MIGHT BE THIS TYPE:

- You use goal-setting apps or M-Shwari Lock Savings
- You rarely make unplanned purchases
- You have at least one dedicated savings account
- You find it hard to talk about money with others

YOUR UPGRADE STRATEGY:

- + Research one beginner-friendly investment platform: Ndovu, Cytonn App, Mali, or a local unit trust
- + Move at least 20% of your savings into an interest-earning vehicle
- + Set a financial goal with a number and a date — vague goals stay dreams

Type 3 The Cash-Out Quickie

Every time money lands in your mobile wallet, your first instinct is to withdraw it immediately. Given how many people have been defrauded, that caution is understandable. But consistently keeping all your money in cash has real costs: it earns no interest, it is easier to spend impulsively, and you miss out on digital finance's safety features.

SIGNS YOU MIGHT BE THIS TYPE:

- You withdraw M-Pesa transfers almost immediately after receiving
- You feel anxious leaving money in a digital account
- You have limited experience with mobile savings products
- You are more comfortable with physical cash

YOUR UPGRADE STRATEGY:

- + Start small: keep KSh 500-1,000 in M-Shwari for 30 days and observe
- + Use two accounts: one for daily transactions, one long-term savings you commit not to touch
- + Research what protections are in place for your mobile money provider

Type 4 The Digital Hustler

You are entrepreneurial and opportunity-driven — always looking for new income streams: freelancing, Instagram selling, dropshipping, content creation. Your ambition is a tremendous asset. But ambition without financial structure leads to inconsistent income management and vulnerability to online business scams.

SIGNS YOU MIGHT BE THIS TYPE:

- You have multiple income streams or side hustles
- You actively seek digital business opportunities
- You may not track all income and expenses carefully
- You sometimes chase opportunities without vetting them

YOUR UPGRADE STRATEGY:

- + Treat your hustle like a business: track every shilling in and out
- + Separate business and personal money: open a dedicated M-Pesa Paybill or Till Number
- + Build a larger emergency fund (3 months of expenses) — inconsistent income demands it
- + Apply the ALARM fraud framework (Module 5) to every 'opportunity'

Type 5 The Digital Illiterate

If you identify as this type, you have already taken the most important step: acknowledging the gap and seeking to close it. You may feel overwhelmed by online financial platforms, avoid digital transactions, or rely on others for digital financial tasks. There is no shame here — digital finance was never properly taught in most schools, and it evolves rapidly.

SIGNS YOU MIGHT BE THIS TYPE:

- You avoid mobile banking apps even when they would be convenient
- You rely on others for digital financial tasks
- You have missed out on digital savings or investment products
- New platforms feel overwhelming

YOUR UPGRADE STRATEGY:

- + Start with one platform only — learn it completely before adding others
- + Find a trusted person who can walk you through tasks step by step
- + Use official tutorials: Safaricom, your bank, and CBK-licensed platforms have free videos
- + Celebrate every small win — each new digital skill is real, compounding progress

Identify Yourself & Build Your Upgrade Plan

Which type resonates most with you? Circle it, then complete the reflection below.

Type 1 Impulse Spender	Type 2 Silent Saver	Type 3 Cash-Out Quickie	Type 4 Digital Hustler	Type 5 Digital Illiterate
---------------------------	------------------------	----------------------------	---------------------------	------------------------------

My primary identity type is:

Does this type reflect who I want to be financially, or who I've been by default?

What experience or influence shaped this pattern?

In 12 months, which type do I want to embody?

The one upgrade habit I will commit to this week:

Who will hold me accountable?

5-Minute Identity Action

1. Share this PDF with one friend. Ask them to identify their type.
2. Set a calendar reminder for 30 days from now to re-read your upgrade strategy and check progress.
3. Write your upgrade habit somewhere visible — your phone wallpaper, a sticky note, your mirror.
4. Open your M-Pesa or banking app right now and check your last 10 transactions. Do they reflect your identity type? Are they moving you toward your goals?

Remember

Your Digital Money Identity is not fixed. It describes your current defaults — not your destiny. Every financial skill you build compounds over time. The best time to start is today.
